

BARBARA POLUS

Barbara Polus is Associate Professor in Chiropractic Neuroscience at RMIT University. She initially trained as a Chiropractor graduating from Phillip Institute of Technology (PIT) in 1980. She moved to Armidale NSW where she commenced private practice as a Chiropractor while undertaking a Master of Science degree at the University of New England. She continued postgraduate training in neuroscience at Monash University completing her PhD in 1996. She has worked as a chiropractor in her own practice as well as undertaking both teaching and learning, and research responsibilities at RMIT University since 1991. She currently has a full-time academic position at RMIT University. Her current research areas of interest include the influence of neck somatosensory inputs on sensorimotor integration and the evaluation of whole person benefits of chiropractic care delivered in a community setting.