Vasyli Hoke

The Vasyli – Hoke device is unique in its design for the control of the Pes Cavus foot type. When our foot hits the ground, the subtalar joint pronates to create a flexible and shock absorbing foot as we accept the weight of our body. As we move forward over our foot, the subtalar joint reverses direction - supinates - to create a more stable foot to allow smooth transfer of the load to the other foot. It is common for many people to move too far into subtalar pronation or remain in a pronated position too long. A wide variety of Vasyli devices have been designed to match the contours of the foot & keep the pronation in an acceptable range.

Vasyli McPoil

The Vasyli – McPoil Tissue Stress Relief pre-fabricated foot orthotic is the result of the collaboration between Vasyli Medical's Innovation Director, Chairman and Podiatrist Phillip Vasyli and Prof. Thomas G. McPoil PhD, PT, ATC. Its design incorporates intrinsic features based on the McPoil - Hunt Theory of Tissue Stress. Essentially, the orthotic incorporates a "dual density" approach using a sifter density overlay material to allow for what Tom calls the "normal" amount of pronation, while preventing over or excess pronation with a higher density orthotic shell.
